A short day winding on rocky paths through ancient vineyards.

We traveled by train and bus to Pont Saint-Martin, and set off past a church displaying the stages of the way from Canterbury to Rome on posters on its wall. From there we climbed up the hillside and along the rocky paths to the chapel of St. Roca, and then wound up and down the rocky pathways between vineyards to the quiet village of Carema, famous for the production of Carema wines. Carema's name derives from cameram for 'customs' due to its historic role as the border town between the regions of Piemonte and Aosta. We go past the church of Saint Matthew, and continue through more vineyards to the Parish church of San Lorenzo and the Baptistry of Saint John the Baptist in Settimo Vittone. Set at the entrance to the Canavese plain, Settimo Vittone traces its roots back to a Salassi settlement at this location. After conquest by the Romans-_ its name was changed to indicate it was seven Roman miles up the road to Aosta. From there it wasn't far through more vineyards on ancient stone pathways to the hostel in San Germano.
