We found our way from Burgdorf back to Rüfenacht, following the old route from Luzern to Fribourg which crosses the Aare over the Auguetbrücke near Muri, rather than going into Berne.

The old city of Burgdorf is full of history, but we passed most of it by as we had already been there on a few occasions, notably for the 200th centenary celebration of the great fire of Burgdorf. It is well worth spending a day in Burgdorf if you've never been there before! We had deviated from the signposted Jakobsweg (Route 4) from Solothurn, taking a detour along the river Emme to Burgdorf, but now we head back to it. From Burgdorf, we cut across the Emmental towards Bern, over Zimmerberg and down to Krauchthal, once a thriving medieval village with castles and monasteries, but now famous only for its high security prison. There we picked up the route, and came across various resting places for pilgrims. The most notable was the Waldhulsi am Klosterweg at the top of the wooded hill after Krauchthal, fully equipped with wood stove! From there we went down to Utzigen castle, now an old people's home, then to Boll, though its wide valley, and then over the Dentenberg.
