Down wooded hills, past dinosaur footprints, a canal then on to Biel/Bienne

From Sonzebon we set off along the railway, past a house with a Scottish Saltire flag, and along a pleasant stream. Soon, however, we came across a motorway crossing, where we had to press a button to raise a barrier to get past. Then came some pleasant countryside, suddenly discovering dinosaur tracks by a crumbling cliff! After finding our way to the other side of the motorway, we encountered woods and a village, before yet again having to get round the motorway, and walk through a cement factory! Following the stream to Frinvillier, we discovered a complicated irrigation system, as well as a restaurant for an ice cream stop.

Unfortunately the Taubenlochs gorge was closed, and so we had to take a detour up and round a wooded hillside, and then taking an old road down to Biel, where we wandered around the old town and admired the town reformed church, complete with a stamp for pilgrims.
