From Gernika over hills in the rain to catch a bus from a small village

We took the train from our base in Bilbao back to Gernika, and followed the signs through old and new parts to a steep climb through woods. There were spectacular views of the rolling countryside when the trees thinned, but few villages. Finally we came across an Albergue where the owner provided us with a coffee before we continued our way. An interesting feature we came across occasionally was boats sitting by themselves miles from the sea. We also came across yet another closed Albergue, looking as if it hadn't been used for some time. At one point we missed our turning, and found ourselves on a quiet road with large, isolated properties looking as if they were owned by people who valued their seclusion! We managed to get back on the correct way, and after more forest, and muddy slopes, we headed down a road to a village where we discovered a bus about to set off for Bilbao, so we leapt on to it.
